

Keeping Connected - The CPCScotland Weekly Bulletin

Issue 69 - Tuesday 7th September 2021

Issued to support Child Protection Committees and partners with up to date information on child protection issues.

Welcome to Issue 69 of Keeping Connected.

Last week the Scottish Government published the National Guidance for Child Protection in Scotland 2021 with a suite of supporting documents. CPCScotland members have informed and advised on the development

Scottish Government also published National Guidance for Child Protection Committees Under taking Learning Reviews which has benefitted from of CPCScotland members throughout its development. I hope this guidance will support CPCs in adopting a proportionate approach to undertaking reviews with learning at the heart of the process. On this note I would like to draw attention to item 11. This family impact statement follows an adult safeguarding review in England and is a very powerful reminder that we need to use reviews as a catalyst to make improvements to practice or, as Anne's son put it, 'the point of [the] review'. The message in this statement is equally relevant to Learning Reviews in Child Protection in Scotland as it is for Adult Safeguarding Reviews in England.

Remember, if you have anything from your area you think would be of interest to others across Scotland please get in touch with Susan Mitchell at liaison@strath.ac.uk to discuss information we could include in Keeping Connected.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

1 National Guidance for Child Protection in Scotland 2021

The Scottish Government published the National Guidance for Child Protection in Scotland 2021 on 2nd September 2021 with a suite of accompanying documents including a series of Practice Insights and supportive statements from a range of stakeholders including CPCScotland. A PageFlip version has also been published.

This non-statutory Guidance describes the responsibilities and expectations for all involved in protecting children in Scotland and replaces the 2014 version. It outlines how statutory and non-government agencies should work together with parents, families and communities to prevent harm and to protect children from abuse and neglect. The Guidance promotes partnership between those who care about and have responsibilities for the child, and entails a collaborative approach between professionals, carers and family members.

A key change in the 2021 Guidance is to reflect the greater integration of child protection within the Getting it right for every child (GIRFEC) continuum and use GIRFEC language and core components to frame identification and proportionate responses to child protection concerns within the National Practice Model. The Guidance also has a strengthened focus on children's rights, engagement and collaboration with children and families, and on building on strengths.

Scottish Government have also published a supporting narrative for use in wider communications which is intended to reiterate the commitment to the Promise vision and set out how our approach to child protection in Scotland aligns with and supports strategic developments.

Implementation

The Scottish Government acknowledge that consistent implementation across Scotland will be key to realising the benefits from this revised guidance. They have established an implementation steering group to undertake detailed

Research and Evidence Based Reports

22 Staff wellbeing research summary

St Christopher's Fellowship, a charity which provides children's homes, has published research into improving emotional wellbeing for children's social care workforce. Findings from the research includes: introducing individual therapeutic support for staff helped lower the risk of burn out and secondary traumatic stress, and equipping employees with the skills and knowledge to better support young people with trauma increased staff resilience and reduced the risk of secondary traumatic stress.

24 Early impact of Covid -19 lockdown on Muslim & Black Minority Ethnic women in Scotland

Amina, The Muslim Women's Resource Centre, a third sector organisation working with women in Scotland, circulated a survey early in the pandemic to learn how its constituent communities were affected by the Covid-19 pandemic. The survey gathered experiences especially of Muslim and Black minority ethnic women and those in minority religious groups in Scotland, offering an important source of data on the experiences and perspectives of under researched groups.
